It was a comprehensive undertaking and was published in five volumes: Volume 1 deals mainly with the London area comprising the City of London, Westminster and Southwark. Volumes 2 to 4 cover the wider country. (Note that the directory only covers England and Wales even though it is termed a "British" directory). Volume 5 comprises an appendix and a collection of supplements containing omissions, alterations, amendments, etc. received too late to be included in the main volumes but which were bound with the original work. The supplements relate to the London area. The entry for Dursley is found in Volume 2 on pages 854-856.

This transcription was carried out by Andrew Barton of Dursley in 2004. All punctuation and spelling of the original is retained, one of the only exceptions being to replace the long 's', i.e. that resembling an 'f', by the standard modern form for easier readability. In addition the basic layout of the original work has been kept, although page breaks are likely to have fallen in different places. The transcription has been checked thoroughly but no guarantees are made as to its accuracy and reference should be made to the original work if in doubt.

DURSLEY, GLOUCESTERSHIRE

This town was formerly remarkable for its extensive broad-cloth manufactory; and still carries on a considerable trade in that branch of business; as also in card-making. It is a borough of very great antiquity, being one of the five boroughs returned by the sheriff of the county in the reign of Edward I, but it has long lost the privilege of sending men to parliament. It is now governed by a bailiff chosen annually. The town gives the title of Viscount to Earl Berkeley. Here is a handsome market-house, built in 1738, of freestone; market on Thursday; and fairs on the 6th of May, and 4th of December. The town consists of two narrow streets, forming something like the letter T, with a hamlet without the borough, containing more houses than either of them. On the S. side of the church-yard rises perpendicularly a copious spring, which drives a fulling-mill within a hundred yards of it. The church is large with two aisles and a tower.

Dursley, it is said, has been formerly noted for a sharp over-reaching people; whence arose a proverbial saying of a tricking man, "He is a man of Dursley." Contiguous to the town are the remains of a rock of towfe stone, remarkable for its extreme durability: the exterior wall of the noble castle of Berkeley were built with this stone; and, although upwards of six centuries have passed since their erection, they do not shew the least appearance of decay. Adjoining to the town, an excellent and extensive paper-manufactory has been recently established by Mr. Joseph Smith. At Cambridge, (on the Bristol road,) four miles from Dursley, is a very extensive manufactory of edge-tools; the proprietor of which is Mr. William Underwood. Stinchcomb Hill, near Dursley, commands prospects of as great extent and beauty as any eminence in the kingdom.

Banker - Richard Williams draws on Vere, Lucadou, Troughton, Lucadou, and Smart, No. 77, Lombard Street, London.

Postmaster, Mathew Church; post in and out daily. - Distributor of stamps, Richard Williams.

Waggons to London, Bristol, Gloucester, and Tetbury, weekly. In Dursley is but one good inn, the Old Bell. - Dursley is distant from Gloucester 15 miles; Stroud 10; Tetbury 10; Cirencester 20; Berkeley 5; Wotton 4; and from London 107.
